THIRTY YOUNG PROFESSIONALS FROM AROUND THE GLOBE RECOGNIZED BY LEADING ENVIRONMENTAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Honoring innovative young people transforming environmental education

Washington, DC, November 3, 2017 — Thirty young people, ages 30 and under, were recently recognized by the North American Association for Environmental Education (NAAEE). The EE 30 Under 30 highlights the work of young professionals of various backgrounds, ethnicities, genders, and communities who are using education to help protect the environment.

The program was started by a partnership between NAAEE and the US Fish & Wildlife Service (USFWS). In 2017, the program expanded its search beyond North America to include international candidates, through support from the Global Environmental Education Partnership (GEEP) and the US Forest Service (USFS). It shines a spotlight on the incredible efforts of young people around the world, and motivates others to get involved in environmental education in their communities.

All of this year's finalists use their skills and passion to increase environmental practices and behaviors in their homes, schools, and communities. The 2017 honorees include a mix of backgrounds, projects, and passions. Some are artists and entertainers employing their creative talents to increase environmental awareness. Others have created environmental education programs on their college campuses or joined forces with zoos, aquariums, or parks. A number have founded programs that bring environmental education programming to underserved, indigenous, diverse, and international populations.

"These dedicated young people are building a stronger and more inclusive environmental movement," said Judy Braus, Executive Director. "NAAEE looks forward to supporting the continuing efforts of these exceptional environmental education leaders. Their innovative ideas, passion, and drive show that future leadership will be in more than capable hands."

Four of the 30 young people, Ankita Bhalla, Connel Bradwell, Lucila Belén Castro, and Leandra Taylor, participated in a panel discussion moderated by Danni Washington, founder of The Big Blue & You, and the host of TV series Xploration - Nature Knows Best. The panelists spoke about their work, perspectives on the field of environmental education and hopes for the future. Broadcast on Facebook Live, the event is available to view on the NAAEE YouTube channel: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IKShRnIqIMs>.
