Appeal for Environmental Literacy
EIS + RTR = STEAM

When I think of STEAM, I think of robots and rockets and advances in medical technology ...I think of brilliant young minds focused on substantial goals and tangible rewards. My goals are less quantitative. I want to promote Ecology education. I want to show students the rainforest of 1817 in brilliant color. I was inspired by the thought of students being wowed by Remember the Rainforest. <http://remembertherainforest.com/shop2/rtr1/ebook/etchcoms/treasureebooknew.html>

These images are a rare display of Earth History, a flash of our collective unconscious. Like gems they cast a light from the past. They teach without words. They illuminate the fate of the future. RTR is where Art crosses the path of Science.

As web designer for Remember the Rainforest, I'm reaching out to educators. My interest in the rainforest was inspired by my daughter Amy, an Eco educator in the Amazon. Amy showed me images from the Martius-Spix expedition. Our Eco education program is based on that expedition.

I spent years in the rare book libraries scanning the plants and animals to link them to the expedition text. It's an education just to click through the links on each page. That's what I wish even the youngest students will do : land on a page and go exploring.

RTR has made an unlikely alliance with Enterprise in Space. While developing knowledge and talent for life in Space, EIS strongly endorses the preservation, celebration and renewal of our Earth. We have joined forces with Enterprise in Space Academy to produce Earth Science lessons K-12. RTR was approved by the British govt. for CurriculumOnLine, by the Da Vinci Science Center and by the National Wildlife Federation.

EIS + RTR = STEAM

I can't imagine what your Environmental Literacy program will ultimately look like but I believe every school needs such a program. Remember the Rainforest should be prominently featured as a centerpiece. Its extensive index features topics like oxygenation, plant formations and functions, wildlife habitats, and essays on Nature by the Father of Ecology, Karl von Martius, expedition leader. I'm picturing the awesome projects and reports that will be produced from the expedition index and the 10,000 downloadable images.

Make time for Remember the Rainforest. It is a Green Oasis and a meaningful reward for students of all ages any day of the week, anytime of year. Celebrate the Earth by studying images from the past !

Please show your support by downloading free posters for your school library and classrooms.
